Mexican Cattle Crossing Resumes

Cattle feeders across the Texas Panhandle and Western Oklahoma are watching an important development in the beef industry as Mexican feeder cattle shipments resume through approved southern border ports. The renewed movement comes after more than a year of disruptions caused by concerns over New World screwworm, a livestock pest that prompted restrictions on cattle imports from Mexico.

According to an October 18 report from Oklahoma Farm Report, Scott Anderson of Guymon, Oklahoma, discussed the issue during the 2026 Texas Cattle Feeders Association convention in Oklahoma City. Anderson serves as vice chairman of the policy division for the National Cattlemen’s Beef Association and is a past chairman of the Texas Cattle Feeders Association.

The reopening is important because the U.S. cattle supply remains tight. With fewer cattle available domestically, feedlots need dependable sources of feeder cattle to keep their operations running. Mexican cattle have traditionally helped supply feeding operations across the Southern Plains.

The border has reopened in stages. The U.S. Department of Agriculture reopened the Douglas, Arizona, port to cattle imports on August 24, 2026, followed by Santa Teresa, New Mexico, on September 24. Other ports remain subject to federal restrictions and reopening decisions.

Animal health remains a major concern. New World screwworm larvae can infest wounds in living animals, causing serious tissue damage and potentially death. USDA inspections and import protocols are intended to reduce the risk of introducing the pest into the United States.

For feedlots across the High Plains, reliable cattle supplies are essential to maintaining production and supporting the regional agricultural economy. Cattle feeding also supports jobs in transportation, feed production, veterinary services, and meat processing.

Although the return of Mexican cattle shipments does not solve every challenge facing the beef industry, it provides another source of feeder cattle for operations dealing with tight supplies. Producers will continue watching border policies, animal health safeguards, and cattle prices as the industry moves forward.

Sweet Emotion

Effectiveness experts Les Binet and Peter Field are very British and very smart. They analyze decades of data from the Institute of Practitioners in Advertising (IPA) databank, then they write their conclusions in books.

Their most famous effort, The Long and the Short of It, was the result of analyzing data from nearly 1,000 advertising campaigns. In it, the authors concluded that companies must balance long-term brand building with short term sales activation.

They recommend a 60/40 split in ads: 60 percent geared towards brand building, 40 percent aimed at sales activation. Occasionally, a business should run ads to make immediate sales, but the majority of any company's ads should focus on building the company's brand.

This is revolutionary, because most businesses run 100 percent of their ads in order to make sales today. Les Binet and Peter Field say that advertising only to make immediate sales hurts a company's long-term growth and profitability.

So what approach builds a brand and makes for the most profitable advertising? Binet and Field say the data surprised them.

"Peter and I were both at BMP... and we'd both been trained to think that great advertising took a rational message and put it in an emotional envelope. So the key to powerful advertising was to find a motivating message and then tell that story in an engaging and emotive way," Binet said.

"So when we examined the data, what we expected to find was that the killer combination was emotional and rational together. But when we looked at [it], that is not what we found. What we found was actually quite different. We found that the more you moved away from rational messages to pure emotion, the more effective advertising was."

Revolutionary!

We like to think we are rational creatures, and sometimes we are, but most buying decisions are emotional. We buy the items we buy, from the companies we buy from, based on emotion.

The product makes us feel happy or important or powerful or successful or secure. We buy from companies because we feel an attachment to the owner and the staff and what the company stands for and how they do business.

We do not buy based on facts. Or logic. Or rationality.

We buy based on emotion. And the more a company uses emotion in advertising, the stronger the attachment becomes to the company, and the more effective the advertising becomes at making sales.

Binet and Field say 60 percent of a company's messages should be aimed at building the brand, and they say that's done best through emotion. Not emotion plus reason. Just pure emotion.

They're quick to point out this does not mean that ads have to make people cry, though that's okay, too. It could mean charming people.

There's a whole range of emotions we humans feel, all of which are powerful. A business that taps into these emotions in creating and spreading its brand can powerfully draw people to that brand. That leads to sales.

Then, amid this brand-building, a business should occasionally drop in an ad aimed at making immediate sales. But this works most effectively after people have been drawn to the company's image.

Ads that are full of nothing but facts and unsubstantiated claims fall on deaf ears. People are not looking for an education, and they don't like to be sold to. When a company's ads are perpetually facts, figures and assertions, those ads don't create sales.

But ads aimed at the heart—ads that are pure emotion—reach people's hearts and stay there, making it far more likely that they move people to spend money.

"We found that the more you moved away from rational messages to pure emotion, the more effective advertising was."

To move people to buy, aim for the heart, not the head.

Multiple Arrests Made Following Burglaries at Former Grow House in Beckham County

October 19, 2026 - Beckham County, OK - A series of burglaries at a former marijuana grow facility in Beckham County has led to multiple arrests, the recovery of stolen property and the discovery of illegal drugs, according to Beckham County Sheriff Derek Manning.

Manning said the property, which now serves as a residence rather than a grow operation, has become a repeated target for thieves because equipment and other valuable items remain on the premises.

The latest investigation began when the property owner contacted dispatch after his security cameras stopped working, something that had also occurred during a previous burglary.

Manning and the undersheriff approached the property on foot after finding the entrance gate secured. Once inside, they discovered that approximately five buildings, including the residence, had been broken into.

Investigators also found evidence suggesting the suspects intended to return and collect additional property.

Deputies established multiple layers of surveillance around the property and waited overnight. Shortly before 5 a.m., surveillance alerted authorities that someone had returned.

Deputies stopped one individual, which led them to another suspect. While officers were investigating and making arrests, additional vehicles arrived to pick up individuals involved in the incident.

Manning said one of those vehicles was a pickup that investigators suspected the driver was not authorized to use. Another pickup that arrived was determined to be stolen, and drugs were discovered inside.

The investigation continued with a search of a residence, where authorities discovered what Manning described as a trafficking quantity of methamphetamine and an amount of marijuana consistent with intent to distribute.

Investigators also recovered hundreds of packaged marijuana pre-rolls, which Manning said appeared to have been stolen from a processing facility. A stolen motorcycle and additional suspected stolen property were also located.

Authorities are also investigating a possible firearm violation involving a convicted felon.

Manning said the repeated burglaries at the property have resulted in approximately eight to 10 people being taken into custody over the past couple of months, along with the recovery of substantial amounts of stolen property.

Although investigators initially suspected the latest group might be connected to earlier burglaries, Manning said they appear to be largely separate groups.

“There may be some distant connection between them, but it was just a totally different group of people,” Manning said.

According to Manning, word has apparently spread among individuals looking for items to steal that valuable equipment remains at the location.

“They just got word that there was stuff out there that you could get in there and take,” Manning said.

The sheriff said his department continues working with the property owner to improve security and prevent additional burglaries.

“We’d like word to get around that we are watching that property,” Manning said.

Despite the repeated criminal activity, Manning said the investigations have helped authorities recover stolen property, make arrests and develop leads in other cases.

“It has yielded some good results in the meantime,” Manning said.

Spaceport Expansion Breaks Ground in Burns Flat

October 15, 2026 Burns Flat, OK – State and local officials gathered Tuesday for a groundbreaking ceremony marking the start of construction on a $7.5 million mission control facility and spaceplane hangar at the Infinity One Oklahoma Spaceport in Burns Flat.

The Oklahoma Department of Aerospace and Aeronautics and the Oklahoma Space Industry Development Authority joined legislators, community leaders and representatives from Dawn Aerospace for the event.

The project will establish a permanent home for Dawn Aerospace’s reusable, rocket-powered Aurora spaceplane, which is scheduled to begin operations in Oklahoma in 2027.

Unlike traditional rockets that launch vertically, the Aurora spaceplane takes off and lands on conventional runways, using rocket propulsion to reach extreme altitudes. The technology is designed to provide faster, more affordable access to suborbital space.

The $7.5 million development will include 15,000 square feet of new facilities, consisting of a 5,000-square-foot mission control and operations center and a 10,000-square-foot hangar.

The mission control facility will feature dedicated workspaces for avionics and payload operations, a flight simulation office, conference rooms and additional areas supporting spaceplane operations.

Construction is expected to be completed by fall 2027.

State officials say the investment represents a significant step forward for Oklahoma’s growing aerospace industry, particularly in western Oklahoma, where existing aviation infrastructure offers opportunities for emerging space technologies.

The development is also expected to strengthen Burns Flat’s position as a hub for commercial aerospace activity, bringing advanced spaceflight operations to the region.

The Infinity One Oklahoma Spaceport project is part of a broader effort to establish Oklahoma as a leader in reusable spaceflight technology and expand the state’s role in the commercial space industry.
